The Red Square

This place does not need an introduction. It is located in the heart of Moscow and is, undoubtedly, the most known tourist attraction in Russia.

Gr I can name multiple reasons as to why I like this place. First of all, its amazing looks. It is one of, if not the most beautiful sights I have ever seen. I froze in place when I saw it for the first time.

9 Second, its historic value. It definitely plays a huge role in Russia's history, and that is undeniable.

h If you are a tourist, you will love this place. Even though a majority of it is blocked off due to safety reasons, it is still very entertaining to explore the Red Square's outskirts, especially with all the maps, models and signs.

WRITING

Albert Einstein once stated ~~this phrase~~: "If you want to live a happy life, tie it to a goal, not to people or things. I strongly agree with him, as it is crucial to not keep people around you simply only for the time they had spent with you, but for benefits they give you. Let's prove that."

Firstly, tying your life to people often leads to disastrous outcomes, mainly because changing behaviour is in the nature of humans, and people you knew once as a kind and caring can become bad for you. Moreover, tying yourself to things is not great either. No matter ~~how~~ much time you dedicate to them, it can all go downhill in a matter of seconds, mainly because every thing is material and can devalue or become a burden for you. However, goal is something you desire to achieve. It has its relevancy as long as you consider it your goal.

A good example of a disastrous outcome of tying yourself to the wrong people is Julius ~~Caesar~~ Caesar. He was the prodigy of ~~the~~ the Emperor whose goal was to make his country great. But he made the mistake which cost him his life - relying on Senate. He considered them as a family, but in the end Caesar was ~~stabbed~~ ^{stabbed} by people he ~~considered~~ thought was his relatives. To summarise, To sum up, relying on people nor things is great, as it can lead to disastrous outcomes. It is often better tying yourself to goal, as it is much safer and ~~will be~~ beneficial.
