Writing

To begin with, Stephen King was about to tell us that in order to have a great result of something, you need to be very hard-working and self-confident. Your result doesn't depend on how talented you are.

In my opinion, Stephen King's quotation is a great way to remind people how to achieve their goals. Talent is nothing if the person doesn't do anything with it. Talent can be useful to achieve many goals. The main idea is to find the right way to use your talent.

To prove my point of view I can ~~use~~^{give} an example from history. Every country has its own poets, musicians and so on. One of the most famous poets in Russia is Alexander Pushkin. Of course, he was quite talented person. But what if he haven't known how to write or read? Would he become famous? His popularity is due to his hard work of creating some poems and novels for his entire life.

Eventually, it's not enough to just merely have a talent. Personally, I believe that in order to have some benefits from it you should find out how to use it correctly and work hard to achieve the result you want.
